Please Note: This Page Has Been Archived

Archiving the Compendium was a project to figure out how to deposit an archive of the Globalization Compendium. These pages reflect our thinking in 2008, not necessarily how we finally implemented the archive. This and other pages were archived so changing them won't affect the project.

Community and Identity

The search for autonomy in a globalizing world leads some persons to reconsider and reconstruct identities, their understandings of who they are. These changes come in the search for new communities or in the refurbishing of old communities in order to take advantage of globalization or to act to change it. So we find that the ways in which a variety of communities exercise, enhance, find, or lose their autonomy are changing in response to different globalizing pressures.

Culture

Some of the first discussions of globalization, expressed fears about cultures around the world converging on a Western, consumerist model. In the process, communities would lose cultural autonomy and their most cherished ways of life. Research shows that human beings and their communities are more adaptive and innovative than this simplistic view suggests. Struggles over cultural autonomy create innovative, uncharted borderlands in which the global, cultural, political, and artistic meet, creating and recreating both our understandings of globality and of the worlds in which we live.
