

String Orchestra

November 10, 2010

Programme

Fair Nymphs

Zwei Liebchen (from Sechs Gesänge, Op. 108, no 5)

Auf dem See (Op. 41, no 6)

La Nuit en Mer (from Trois Chansons Bretonnes) Denis Arseneau, piano The Great Sea *

- INTERMISSION -

Salve Regina Kimberley Taylor, soprano solo Ave Maris Stella

Los Rios Acuden ^ Rob Curtis, baritone solo The Sounding Sea

* Canadian composer

^ World Premiere

David N. Childs (1969 - ) Trond Kverno (1945 - ) Raimundo Gonzalez (1984 - ) Eric WilliamBarnum (1979 - )

John Farmer (1570-1605) Josef Rheinberger (1839-1901) Felix Mendelssohn (1809-1847) Henk Badings (1907-1987) Imant Raminsh (1943 - )

| Fair Nymphs(Anonymous, from Triumphs ofOriana, 1601) | Zwei Liebchen(Eduard Morike 1804-1875) |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------|
| , ,                                                                 | A small ship floated on the Danube,               |
| Fair nymphs, I heard one telling,                                   | In it sat bride and groom.                        |
| Diana's train are hunting in this chase.                            | He here, she there.                               |
| to beautify the place,                                              | She spoke: "Beloved, tell me,                     |
| The fawns are running,                                              | What shall I give you as a keepsake?"             |
| The shepherds their pipes tuning,                                   | She tucked back her little arm                    |
| To show their cunning.                                              | And reached into the fresh water.                 |
| The lambs amazed leave off their                                    | The boy did the same,                             |
| grazing,                                                            | laughing and joking happily.                      |
| And blind their eyes with gazing,                                   | "Ah, beautiful wife Done                          |
| Whilst the earth's goddess doth draw                                | give me a pretty ornament!"                       |
| near your places,                                                   | She drew out a beautiful sword                    |
| Attended by the Muses and the                                       | that the boy had for desired a long               |
| Graces.                                                             | time.                                             |
| Then sang the shepherds and nymphs                                  | Now, the boy, what held he in his                 |
| of Diana                                                            | hand?                                             |
| Long live fair Oriana.                                              | A milk-white, delightful string of                |
| Long ho rate o tanta.                                               | pearls.                                           |
| Auf dem See                                                         | He crowned his wife with his gift,                |
| (J.W. von Goethe 1749-1832)                                         | She looked like a Princess.                       |
| 0                                                                   | The boy asked again,                              |
| And fresh sustenance, new blood                                     | "Ah, beautiful wife Done,                         |
| I soak up from the wide world;                                      | Give me another pretty ornament."                 |
| How sweet and good is nature                                        | She reached in for a second time                  |
| Which holds me to her bosom!                                        | and brought out a helmet of bright                |
| The waves rock our little boat                                      | steel                                             |
| In time with the oars,                                              | The boy too reached in,                           |
| And mountains, cloud-capped heavenwards,                            | this time taking out a gold comb.                 |
| Meet our circling course.                                           | As Done reached in for the third                  |
| Eyes, my eyes, why are you cast down?                               | time                                              |
| Golden dreams, do you come again?                                   | Ah! Woe! She fell from the boat!                  |
| Away, you dream, however golden;                                    | The boy jumped to save her                        |
| Here too is love and life.                                          | Trying to pull her from the water:                |
| And fresh sustenance, new blood                                     | Oh, how she regrets her jewellery now             |
| I soak up from the wide world;                                      | Which brought an end to them both.                |
| How sweet and good is nature                                        | As the little boat empty surged down              |
| Which holds me to her bosom!                                        | the river,                                        |
| The waves rock our little boat                                      | The sun sank behind the mountains,                |
| In time with the oars,                                              | And when the moon stood in heaven,                |
| And mountains, cloud-capped heavenwards,                            | The darlings swam dead to the land.               |
| Meet our circling course.                                           | He here, she there.                               |
|                                                              |                                                   |

| La Nuit en Mer                                             | The Great Sea                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------|
| (Théodore Botrel 1868-1925)                                       | (Anonymous, from Hudson BayEskimos)   |
| The breeze swells our sail.                                       |                                           |
| Behold, the first stars twinkling                                 | The great sea has sent me adrift.         |
| upon the waves that rock us,Friends, let us sail the night in | It moves me as the weed in a great river. |
| silence.                                                          | Earth and the great weather move          |
| All noises have been stilled.                                     | me.                                       |
| It seems that everything on earth is                              |                                           |
| dead:                                                             | And move my inward parts with             |
| Humans as well as things, birds as                                | joy.                                      |
| well as roses, all are asleep.                                    | ) - ) -                                   |
| But the sea, it is Living.                                        |                                           |
| It is the immensity constantly                                    |                                           |
| shifting,                                                         | Salve Regina                              |
| Taking the piers by storm                                         | (Adhemar Bishop of Le Puy-en-             |
| disdainful by night and by day                                    | Velay d. 609)                             |
| Except for her, nothing exists but                                |                                           |
| the big lighthouse and its sad re-                                | Hail, Oh Queen, Mother of mercy;          |
| flection.                                                         | our life, our sweetness, and our          |
| At the best place my friends, let us                              | hope: hail!                               |
| now throw our net                                                 |                                           |
| Then, our sails furled foreheads                                  | To thee we cry, poor banished             |
| bare beneath the stars, we will                                   | children of Eve.                          |
| sleep!                                                            | To thee we send up our sighs,             |
| Dream upon the deep peace of all                                  | groaning and weeping in this valley       |
| whom we love in the world below                                   | of tears.                                 |
| Let us sleep upon our schooners.                                  |                                           |
| As in our childhood cradles and                                   | Hasten therefore, our Advocate,           |
| tomorrow, at high tide,                                           | and turn your merciful eyes toward        |
| we will return to the shore trium-                                | us.                                       |
| phant!                                                            |                                           |
| 여행 다니는 것 같은 것 같은 영향에 가지 않는 것이다.                                   | And show us Jesus, the blessed            |
|                                                                   | fruit                                     |
|                                                                   | Of your womb, after this exile.           |
|                                                                   | Oh merciful, O pious,                     |
|                                                                   | Oh sweet Virgin Mary.                     |
|                                                                   |                                           |
|                                                                   |                                           |

| Ave Maris Stella                         | Los Ríos Acuden                                          |
|------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------|
| (St. Bernard de Clairvaux 1090-1153) | (Pablo Neruda 1904-1973)                                 |
| ,                                        | Beloved of the rivers, beset                             |
| Hail ocean`s star,                       | by azure water and transparent                           |
| God's mother dear,                       | drops,                                                   |
| Likewise ever a virgin,                  | like a tree of veins your spectre                        |
| Blest heavenly gate.                     | of dark goddess biting apples:and then awaking naked |
| Receiving that Ave from Gabriel's        | to be tattooed by the rivers,                            |
| lips                                     | and in the wet heights your head                         |
| Settle us in peace,                      | filled the world with new dew.                           |
| Reversing Eva's name.                    | Water rose to your waist.                                |
| reversing Live o manne.                  | You are made of wellsprings                              |
| Loose their chains for the guilty,       | and lakes shone on your forehead.                        |
| Bring forth Light for the blind:         | From your source of density you                          |
| Woes of ours dispel,                     | drew                                                     |
| Good in all things ask for us.           | water like vital tears                                   |
| 0                                        | and hauled the river-beds to the                         |
| Show thyself to be a Mother:             | sand                                                     |
| May He receive through thee our          | across planetary night, crossing                         |
| prayers,                                 | rough, dilated stone,                                    |
| Who for us was born and designed         | breaking down on the way                                 |
| to be Thy Son.                           | all the salt of geology,                                 |
|                                          | cutting through forests of compact                       |
| Virgin all excelling,                    | walls,                                                   |
| Among all most meek,                     | dislodging the muscles of quartz.                        |
| Us from sin set free,                    |                                                          |
| Meek make thou and chaste.               | The Sounding Sea                                         |
|                                          | (G.W. Curtis 1824-1892)                                  |
| Life on us bestow that is pure,          |                                                          |
| A way prepare that is safe               | O listen to the sounding sea                             |
| In order that seeing Jesus,              | That beats on the remorseless                            |
| Always we may rejoice.                   | shore,                                                   |
|                                          | O listen! for that sound will be                         |
| Be praise to God the Father,             | When our wild hearts shall beat no                       |
| To Most High Christ be praise,           | more.                                                    |
| And to the Spirit Holy,                  | O listen well and listen long!                           |
| To the Three be honor equally.           | For sitting folded close to me,                          |
| Amen.                                    | You could not hear a sweeter song                        |
|                                          | Than that hoarse murmur of the                           |
|                                          | sea.                                                     |
|                                          |                                                          |

Musicians

Choir

Soprano Kimberley Taylor Gianna Read Kaylee Rudiger Joelle Lemmen Alison Norris

Alto Tammy-Jo Mortensen Olivia Chow Abra Whitney Svetlana Remnyakova Rosie Kilgannon Marianne Alacoque

Instrumentalists

Denis Arseneau—Piano

Marie Krejcar—Violin I Arlan Vriens—Violin I Amanda Alstad—Violin II Misun Choi—Violin II Julia Hui—Viola Jonathan Styles—Viola Kathleen de Caen—Cello Lisa Lin—Cello Robyn Reekie—Double Bass

Tyson Oatway—Guitar Allyson MacIvor—Cajon Tenor Ksenia Maryniak Raimundo Gonzalez Sean McMann Adam Ferland Stephen McKay Anthony Wynne

Bass Rob Curtis Harlan Kenneth Colin Labadie Anatolyi Urvanov Matthew Knight Spencer Marsden

About the Conductor...

Irene Apanovitch began to study music at the age of five in her birth city of Minsk, Belarus. Since then, she has completed a Bachelor in Music Education at the University of Toronto where she was the chosen recipient of the Lloyd Bradshaw Award in Choral Conducting. Her conducting mentors include Dorren Rao, Ivars Taurins, Lydia Adams, Zimfira Poloz and Agnes Grossmann.

Irene has participated in numerous conducting workshops and masterclasses across Canada and Europe. Irene is currently completing her graduate studies in choral conducting at the University of Alberta under the mentorship of Dr. Debra Cairns and Dr. Leonard Ratzlaff. Irene has received the John and Logie Drew Scholarship in Choral Conducting and is the current recipient of the Queen Elizabeth II Graduate Scholarship.

Acknowledgements

I'd like to give profound thanks to the following individuals:

Mama & Papa—I owe everything to your love and limitless support, without which I could never accomplish my goals and design my dreams.

Lena, Dedushka, and the rest of my family—Thank you for caring about what I do and supporting my growth as a musician. I miss you and wish you were all here to be with me on this day!

Mrs. Petrea—Thank you for encouraging me to play the piano. You opened my heart and mind to the wonder of music-making, and for that I will always be grateful to you.

Dr. Cairns—You are the best teacher and role model that I could have asked for. Thank you for believing in me and helping me realize my potential.

Dr. Ratzlaff—Your passion and dedication to choral art and to teaching inspires me to become the best conductor that I can possibly be.

Friends— Monika, Maria, Shak, Amandeep, Jacques & Isabelle, Ned, Kimberley, Matt M.—you are the backbone without which I wouldn't be the person that I am. I'd like to also thank all of the wonderful friends in my life that this tiny space simply wouldn't fit—thank you for always being there for me and for making my life beautiful.

Last but not least, I'd like to thank my choir and instrumentalists—your hard work, great attitude, and exceptional musicianship made these past eight weeks the most memorable and rewarding time of my life. Thank you. Thank you for attending this recital.

Please join us for a reception following the concert in the Arts Lounge.