PREFACE

The purpose of this finding aid is to provide a guide to the papers and records of the Edmonton Social Planning Council. This objective has been accomplished through the creation of a number of Series or Classes followed by a comprehensive file index. These Classes have been divided into three categories; general correspondence, council projects and publications and reports. A number of appropriate Subclasses were created under the Class heading of general correspondence.

The records, publications and correspondence found in this collection consist of a series of donations received from the Edmonton Social Planning Council and span a period from 1929 to 1984. The four groups of accessioned papers, A78-82, A86-20, A86-35 and A87-109 have been given the manuscript number MS 323. Subject matter contained in these accession groups was similar and wherever possible the original headings were preserved and arranged in sequential order.

Processing this collection and the creation of the finding aid was once again placed in the capable hands of Patrick H. Lamb. As he has previously done, Mr. Lamb accomplished this task with a diligent, accurate and concerned effort and the City of Edmonton Archives greatly appreciates his abilities. Along with a reliable worker, one requires adequate financing and this funding was again provided through the generous assistance of the Arrangement and Description Backlog Reduction Cost-Shared Cooperative Program under the auspices of the National Archives of Canada and the Alberta Archives Council.

Through such appropriate funding archives throughout Canada are better able to serve the needs and concerns of their patrons.

EDMONTON SOCIAL PLANNING COUNCIL

The idea of a social planning agency for Edmonton originated as early as 1928 when the Social Services Council of Canada and some concerned citizen and church organizations formed a social services council for northern Alberta. Later in the year a survey of "reliefwork" confirmed the need for a coordinating agency to provide efficient organization. Unfortunately the depression of 1929 paralysed any efforts to form such an agency for the next ten years.

In 1939 the idea of a council of social agencies re-emerged when the Junior Chamber of Commerce began to explore the need for a community chest. The need for a council was also recommended in a report by Laura Holland written in October and November of 1939. On November 28, 1939 a provisional committee, chaired by John Imrie of the Edmonton Journal, met with social services agencies and agreed to the formation of the Edmonton Council of Social Agencies. This Council began its work in February 1940. In 1941 a Community Chest was established to facilitate the central collection of funds for various social agencies belonging to the Council. In its first year of operation, the Council also established a Christmas Exchange (now known as the Christmas Bureau) to coordinate Christmas giving.

During the first ten years of its operation the Edmonton Council of Social Agencies attempted to fill the gaps that existed in social services available to people. Since the early years of the Council's existence were war years, it was inevitable that it should also become involved in the special problems which arose with servicemen and their families. With the Council's assistance a Family Services Bureau was formed in 1941 and a social services department was established at the Royal Alexandra Hospital in 1944. It was also with the Council's help that a branch of the John Howard Society was established in Edmonton in 1948. Thus in its first ten years the Council played an important role in the establishment and development of organizations to look after a variety of needs of the growing population.

The 1950s, however, held a different set of problems and issues. The discovery of oil in Leduc in the late 1940s encouraged rapid economic growth in Edmonton and necessitated a new approach to community services. The Council began the decade by changing its name to the Edmonton Council of Community Services in order to reflect the growing needs of the city. The Council's membership was expanded to include such other groups as service clubs, home and school associations, ethnic and cultural societies. The Council continued in its role of participation in the formation of new organizations to take care of emerging needs. In 1952 the problem of immigration and adjustment brought about the formation of the Edmonton Citizenship Council. In 1954 the Council of Community Services played an important role in the establishment of the Edmonton Branch of the Canadian Mental Health Association.

In 1952 the Council was reorganized into project committees to deal with particular social problems and issues. Approximately half of this collection consists of material produced by these committees. At the same time the staffs of the Council and the Community Chest were combined to provide closer co-operation between central planning and financing. A Youth Services Division was added in 1957 as a result of interest on the part of the Chief of Police and William Hawrelak, the Mayor of the City of Edmonton. A Welfare Information Service was added in 1959 and operated as a direct service of the Council until 1972.

With the reorganization of the Community Chest into the United Community in 1960, the staffs of the Fund/Chest and the Council were again separated. The objects and bylaws of the Council were considerably altered in 1961. In the first half of the 1960s the Council became more clearly involved in research and planning. This is reflected in the number of studies it conducted - a study on aging, the Northwest Edmonton Study, the Indian and Metis Study, the Juvenile Court Study, a study on transient men, and a day care study. The results of these and other studies are contained in the collection.

During the 1960s the Council went through two name changes. In 1963 it was changed to the Edmonton Welfare Council and in 1967 to its present name, the Edmonton Social Planning Council. These name changes were accepted on both occasions because it was felt that they more accurately reflected the Council's primary functions in research and planning.

After 1965 the Council began to move beyond a research and planning role and to explore and develop new methods of solving peoples problems. Its former role was not abandoned but a more practical approach to planning and research was adopted. This was reflected in such projects as the Emergency Shelter for Women, the Blue Book on Legal Rights, and the Downtown Youth Centre.

At its annual meeting in May 1972 the Council membership adopted a new constitution. The objects and bylaws at that time were simplified and changed to reflect the Council's style of operation. There were two main objectives:

- 1 To develop and maintain a voluntary non-governmental capability for informed decision-making and action
- 2 To initiate and support efforts through which citizens plans can be developed and implemented

During its fifty years of existence the Council has changed its orientation. In its early years it acted as a coordinating body for other social agencies but relinquished this role in the 1960s in order to become more involved with research and planning. The Council's role has been continually modified in order to deal with the current needs of Edmonton's population. Throughout its history the Council has continued to approach emerging social issues, to search for solutions and to undertake numerous worthy research projects. This is clearly reflected in the wealth of material contained in this collection.
